

From the introduction in the 100th issue of the Survey of Current Business: During the eight years which have elapsed since the first issue of the Survey of Current Business, which, incidentally, was only a sample mimeographed set of sheets numbering 10, evidences have been accumulating of the large and growing interest in current business statistics . . . The [Survey], as at the time of origin, is to-day an important governmental adjunct. It provides current weekly and monthly statistical information on the state of the Nation's business to many branches of Government . . . Paralleling the demands of the Government are the growing needs of business. Together these are providing, more and more, the facts which are so essential for the setting-up and execution of forward-looking policies.

The 100th issue also included weekly supplements—weekly business indicators republished in each monthly Survey with “the realization that current statistics are highly perishable and to be of use they must reach the business man at the earliest possible moment.”

The phenomenal growth experienced over just 100 issues sets the tone almost 100 years later for an organization that now produces millions of official data points—national, regional, industry, and international—used by business leaders, policymakers, and the public to make informed decisions.
